You will be responsible for helping the Senior personnel in the development of a Nested-Loop Coherent Beam Combining (NLCBC) system. This involves designing, modelling, and simulating a cascaded tiled array Coherent beam combining system and experimental realization of such a system for technology demonstration for ‘Directed Energy’ applications.

- Mathematical Modeling: You will assist with mathematical modeling to represent, design and optimize the performance of fiber amplifier based Coherent Beam Combining (CBC) systems. This includes analysing light propagation in free space, or through atmospheric turbulence and through different optical systems replicating experimental setup.
- Optical Simulation: You will primarily run simulations in MATLAB/Python to predict the performance of cascaded tiled array CBC system, estimate the design tolerances and evaluate phase control algorithm in open-loop and closed-loop condition to achieve phase synchronization among different channels. The phase control schemes investigated will include Stochastic parallel Gradient

Descent (SPGD) and other suitable Machine Learning based control.

- Experiment: You will assist in performing beam-combining experiments (free-space and fiber-related) to evaluate the performance of an engineered cascaded tiled array CBC system and different phase control algorithms to achieve phase synchronization among multiple channels.
- Data Analysis: You are required to provide weekly reports with analysis of simulation/experimental data. This includes processing and interpreting the data to evaluate and improve the system's performance.
